

A guide to

Business Growth

Helping you make the right decisions

Your business plan describes your business, objectives, strategies, the market you are in and your financial forecasts. It is used for a number of reasons, from securing external funding to measuring internally how successful your business is. It's your blueprint for the future.

The content really depends upon how you will be using your business plan and who your audience is. For instance, if you are looking for external funding for your business the financial forecasts and the detailed assumptions behind those forecasts will be crucial.

Growth

Your business plan isn't a one-off exercise, something you do then forget about as it gathers dust in a drawer. It's a working document and should be continually reviewed. Our team will work with you and help you understand what needs to change to achieve growth.

Exit

We can help you with valuing of your business and explore different exit options before sale, management buy-out or family succession. We'll consider the tax implications of each and, if applicable, help you with retirement planning.

Our specialist business advisers can help you develop your business plan and advise you on the financial and tax implications of starting and running your business.
